- Wood is a natural product subject to variations from region to region and season in which it is cut.
- Wood is also sensitive to heat and UV light, which over time may change the color of the sample being viewed and subsequently the floor that has been installed.
- Changes in color and deepening of wood grain are a natural occurrence.
These changes are normal, commonly referred to as patina and not considered a defect.
- Wood is also hygroscopic and is subject to changes such as gapping or possible surface distortion and deterioration in a hostile environment.
- Careful control of temperature and humidity can help maintain optimal preservation of the floor.
- Many factors influence weathering. Prolong exposure to sunlight will slightly discolor the floor.
- Water, moisture, mechanical forces and heat will alter the appearance and texture of wood.
- Proper maintenance is also key (see Nikzad Floors® "Maintenance and Warranty Guide" for further details).
- For additional information on the nature of wood, please refer to the N.W.F.A. (National Wood Flooring Association) website for more detailed, technical information.
